

Media: Maersk and DSV have submitted bids for DB Schenker

According to Handelsblatt, investors are talking about seven to ten companies that have submitted a non-binding offer.

According to Handelsblatt, Deutsche Bahn can hope for proceeds of EUR 13.5 billion from the sale. | Photo: Arne Dedert/AP/Ritzau Scanpix

BY LIV ALMER

Between seven and ten companies have submitted non-binding offers to buy DB Schenker, including Maersk and DSV.

According to information from German business daily Handelsblatt, several interested parties have submitted preliminary bids for Deutsche Bahn's subsidiary DB Schenker. The deadline for this expired on Tuesday.

According to Handelsblatt, investors are talking about seven to ten companies that have submitted a non-binding offer. Large companies such as DHL Group have withdrawn from the process.

Logistics company DSV and container major Maersk have also submitted a bid, Handelsblatt has learned from investor circles.

In addition, the Saudi Arabian logistics company Bahri is also involved. The two private equity funds Carlyle and CVC have joined forces in a joint bid, as have Advent and Bain, according to the media outlet.

The current bids for logistics company DB Schenker are not yet decisive for the final purchase price, but are intended to limit the number of interested parties.

According to Handelsblatt, Deutsche Bahn can hope for proceeds of EUR 13.5 billion for the sale.